Guest Speaker ~ Pat Tibbett

'A short Walk through the History of Royal Perth Hospital

Pat Tibbett was awarded the John Curtin Medal for her outstanding contribution to the nursing profession and to health care delivery in Western Australia.

Pat told the meeting that Royal Perth Hospital was established in 1829 and is Western Australia's longest-serving hospital. It is renowned for contributing to innovation and excellence in medical research and patient care.

Showing photographs, she related the story of how it all began, from the first colonial hospital, which was established in a tent on Garden Island, in 1829.

In June 1830, the hospital tent was re-erected in Cathedral Avenue, Perth.

From 1833 a more substantial, colonial hospital operated for a short time from a rented room in a private house.

Six years later, in December 1840, this was re-opened in a building formerly used as stables on the corner of St Georges Terrace and Irwin Street.

The hospital commenced operations on the corner of Murray Street and Victoria Square on 14 July 1855, and was formally named the Colonial Hospital.

In the years since, it has expanded north to Wellington Street, and has been known variously as the Perth Public Hospital, the Perth Hospital and finally, from 1946, as Royal Perth Hospital.

The original Hospital building still exists on the corner of Murray Street and Victoria Square - though additions and extensions now hide its Murray Street facade.

It is heritage listed and houses the medical library, offices and the old cafeteria function space.

It was finally completed and opened in 1988.

The Royal Perth Hospital Museum displays medical equipment of the past and provides a fascinating insight into the changes constantly taking place in the field of medicine.

The Royal Perth Rehabilitation Hospital was first established as an isolation tent hospital in the bush at Shenton Park during the outbreak of smallpox in April 1893.

This hospital, variously known as the Isolation Hospital, the Victoria Hospital, the Infectious Diseases Branch and finally as the Royal Perth Rehabilitation Hospital, commenced its role as a major rehabilitation hospital with the rehabilitation of polio patients following the epidemic of 1948-56.

Research at Royal Perth Hospital plays a vital role in the delivery of a high standard of health care in Western Australia.

Proposed Changes to the Foundation Constitution

President Gail McCulloch announced that we would not be voting on the issue as she would prefer to have a decision by consensus when all viewpoints have been considered and due diligence has been completed on the regulatory, legal and tax implications.

She invited members with concerns or reservations to share them with her by next week.
